

PRAYER FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL

Pursuant to Illinois Supreme Court Rule 315, Petitioners Constellation NewEnergy, Inc., CNE Gas Supply, LLC, Constellation Energy Gas Choice, LLC, and Constellation Gas Division, LLC (collectively, “Constellation”), who were Respondents in Discovery in the circuit court, respectfully petition for leave to appeal the judgment of the Illinois Appellate Court for the First Judicial District in Richard Dent et al. v. Constellation NewEnergy, Inc., et al., 2020 IL App (1st) 191652 (A1-A21) (“Opinion”).

The Appellate Court’s ruling in this case conflicts with well-established case law from this Court and the Appellate Court, and will eviscerate the State’s strong public policy interest in ensuring that employees can safely report sexual harassment concerns, and that employers can conduct confidential workplace investigations of allegations of sexual harassment.

Here, Constellation, an employer, conducted a confidential investigation of workplace sexual harassment allegedly committed by Richard Dent (“Dent”). Subsequently, it terminated its at-will contracts with RLD Resources (“RLD”), owned by Richard Dent. RLD and Dent, Petitioners in the circuit court, filed a petition for pre-suit discovery from Constellation under Ill. S. Ct. Rule 224, demanding that Constellation disclose the identity of the victim, witnesses, and investigators, so that RLD and Dent could sue them for defamation.

The law appropriately recognizes that victims and witnesses reporting workplace sexual harassment enjoy a qualified privilege against a defamation claim—one that can be overcome only if the defamation plaintiff can allege and then prove concrete facts showing abuse of the privilege. Here, Dent’s Rule 224 petition pleaded facts that, if true, would establish that the alleged defamatory statements are protected by a qualified privilege. He did not plead any facts needed to overcome the privilege.

Numerous cases establish that, in such circumstances, a defamation complaint should be dismissed under 735 ILCS 5/2-615. Nevertheless, the Appellate Court refused to dismiss the Rule 224 petition on the ground that the qualified privilege is an affirmative defense that cannot be raised in a Section 2-615 motion. The Appellate Court thus applied a different and more stringent standard to a Section 2-615 motion in a case involving a Rule 224 petition than the standard that applies to ordinary complaints.

That holding will provide perpetrators an easy path to force employers to divulge the names of victims and witnesses who can then be threatened with or subjected to retaliatory defamation suits, thereby undermining the very purpose of the qualified privilege. Even if those suits ultimately are dismissed, the prospect of being publicly identified and sued for damages, and having to incur significant legal fees to defend against a retaliatory defamation claim, will strongly discourage victims and witnesses from coming forward. Indeed, “victims of harassment and companies with a goal of preventing harassment would be ‘handcuffed’ by a fear of defamation liability.” Vickers v. Abbott Laboratories, 308 Ill. App. 3d 393, 402 (1st Dist. 1999). And the important public policy goal of combating harassment would be severely frustrated.

This Court's review is needed to reconcile the conflict between the Appellate Court's decision in this case and other precedent. This Court should make clear that the same standard under Section 2-615 applies to both Rule 224 petitions and complaints, and accordingly, that a Rule 224 petition should be dismissed under Section 2-615 when the petitioner pleads all the facts needed to establish the existence of a qualified privilege and fails to plead any facts needed to overcome that qualified privilege.

In another respect as well, the Appellate Court's opinion conflicts with other Appellate Court decisions. The First and Fifth Districts have held that dismissal of a Rule 224 petition is appropriate when the petitioner knows the identity of one of the potentially liable parties, because the petitioner can then sue and (if the complaint is viable) use discovery to learn the identities of others. In conflict with those other decisions, the Appellate Court here refused to dismiss the Rule 224 petition despite the fact that Dent and RLD in fact knew the identity of one of the parties whom they allege made defamatory statements (the investigators). For that reason as well, leave to appeal should be granted.

STATEMENT REGARDING JUDGMENT AND REHEARING

The Appellate Court entered its judgment and an accompanying Rule 23 Order on September 30, 2020. Dent and RLD moved to publish. The motion was granted on October 29, 2020. The Appellate Court opinion was published on November 25, 2020. See 2020 IL App (1st) 191652 (A01-A21). No petition for rehearing was filed.

POINTS RELIED UPON IN SEEKING REVIEW

- The State has a strong public policy interest in protecting victims and witnesses of sexual harassment from retaliatory defamation suits, and in protecting employers' ability to conduct confidential investigations of sexual harassment allegations. The law advances that interest by recognizing a qualified privilege against defamation liability for statements made by victims, witnesses, and investigators in the course of an employer's sexual harassment investigation.

- Cases from this Court and other Appellate Court cases establish that, when a complaint pleads all the facts necessary to establish a qualified privilege and fails to plead the facts necessary to overcome that privilege, the complaint is subject to dismissal under Section 2-615.

- The Appellate Court's ruling conflicts with that established body of precedent and applies a more stringent standard in the context of a Rule 224 petition. Even when the Rule 224 petition pleads the facts necessary to establish the qualified privilege, the Appellate Court held that dismissal is improper under Section 2-615 because the qualified privilege is an affirmative defense.

- The Appellate Court's ruling will significantly impede the State's strong public policy interest in encouraging victims of sexual harassment to come forward and protecting the confidentiality of sexual harassment investigations by employers. It will allow perpetrators to engage in pre-suit discovery of the identities of victims and witnesses, even when, based on the facts alleged in the Rule 224 petition, the allegedly defamatory statements are protected by the qualified privilege and thus cannot give rise to liability.

- The Appellate Court’s ruling also conflicts with other Appellate Court precedent because it permits Rule 224 proceedings to continue even though the petitioners in fact knew the identity of one party who may be responsible in damages. The petitioners thus were able to file a complaint and, if the complaint were viable, pursue the discovery of other potential defendants in that action. Because the purpose of Rule 224 has been served, the petition should have been dismissed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. The Rule 224 Petition.

Richard Dent is the Chief Executive Officer of RLD, which entered into at-will contracts with Constellation to provide electricity and natural gas sales, marketing, and consulting services. A23 (Rule 224 Petition (“Petition”) ¶ 5); A31-32 (Ex. A to Petition). On September 14, 2018, attorneys representing Constellation met with Dent to advise him that certain allegations had been made against him. A23 (Petition ¶ 6); A02-A03 (Opinion ¶¶ 6-7).

On March 28, 2019, Dent and RLD filed a Petition in Cook County Circuit Court, pursuant to Ill. S. Ct. R. 224, demanding that Constellation identify the individuals who made those allegations, so that he could bring a defamation suit against them. A22-A36; A26 (Petition ¶ 23). According to Dent, three unidentified persons, A, B, and C, made statements “imput[ing] to Dent acts of moral turpitude and impugned his character, reputation and good name,” A25 (Petition ¶ 17). Dent claimed that he and RLD were damaged as a consequence. A25-A26 (Petition ¶ 18).

According to the Petition: (1) an unidentified Constellation employee, Person A, told Constellation investigators that in July 2018, Dent inappropriately touched her at a Constellation-sponsored pre-golf tournament party held at the Shedd Aquarium in Chicago; (2) Person A also told a Constellation investigator that in June 2016, at another Constellation-sponsored golfing event in the Philadelphia area, Dent had said to her that she “had a butt like a sister”; (3) another individual, also employed by Constellation, Person B, told the Constellation investigator that he had observed Dent collecting golf materials at the Marriott Hotel in Chicago, where Constellation had arranged for the distribution of guest passes, polo shirts, and other items for the July 2018 event, and that Dent was drunk and disorderly at that time; and (4) Constellation’s outside investigator, Person C, then published to Constellation the statements of Persons A and B when relaying the findings of the investigation. A24-A26 (Petition ¶¶ 7, 12-14); A02-A03 (Opinion ¶¶ 6-7).

After Constellation completed its investigation, which included the September 14, 2018 interview with Dent (the purpose of which was to give Dent “an opportunity to provide his recollection of the events” described above, A35 (Ex. B to Petition at 1)), Constellation notified Dent that it was terminating its consulting agreements with RLD. A24-A25 (Petition ¶¶ 10-11, 14). Attached to the Petition was a termination notice dated October 1, 2018. A31-A33 (Ex. A to Petition). The Petition also included a December 2019 letter from Constellation’s counsel to Dent’s counsel. That letter stated that Constellation had hired a third party to investigate the claims against Dent, identified the investigators, with whom Dent had met on September 14, 2018, and stated that Dent’s denials were not credible and that Dent’s conduct violated the company’s code of conduct. A35-A36 (Ex. B to Petition).

B. Constellation’s Motion to Dismiss.

Constellation moved to dismiss the Rule 224 petition under Section 2-615 on the ground that the petition’s allegations themselves established that the defamatory statements were subject to a qualified privilege.

As Constellation explained in its motion papers, Rule 224 “requires a petitioner to demonstrate the reason why the proposed discovery seeking the individual’s identity is ‘necessary.’” Stone v. Paddock Pubs., Inc., 2011 IL App (1st) 093386, ¶ 14 (quoting Ill. S. Ct. R. 224(a)(1)(ii)). In the defamation context, this Court has held that proposed pre-suit discovery is not “necessary,” and thus not permitted, if the defamation allegations set forth in the Rule 224 petition are subject to dismissal under Section 2-615. Hadley, 2015 IL 118000, ¶ 27.

Certain communications made in the context of an employer's investigation into alleged harassment can be protected by a qualified privilege. As this Court has explained, "[a] privileged communication is one which, except for the occasion on which or the circumstances under which it is made, might be defamatory and actionable." Kuwik v. Starmark Star Marketing & Admin., Inc., 156 Ill. 2d 16, 24 (1993) (quotation marks omitted). Courts recognize a qualified privilege "based on the policy of protecting honest communications of misinformation in certain favored circumstances in order to facilitate the availability of correct information." Id. In particular, as Constellation explained, courts have recognized that a qualified privilege attaches to statements made by victims and witnesses in the context of an employer's investigation of alleged sexual harassment. See Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 402. To overcome a qualified privilege, "a plaintiff must prove that the defendant either intentionally published the material while knowing the matter was false, or displayed a reckless disregard as to the matter's falseness." Kuwik, 156 Ill. 2d at 133.

Here, the Petition's allegations, taken as true for purposes of the Section 2-615 motion, themselves established the qualified privilege: the Petition specifically alleged that the defamatory statements were made in the context of Constellation's investigation of a sexual harassment complaint raised by an employee. A23-A25 (Petition ¶¶ 7, 8, 12); A35-A36 (Ex. B to Petition). Thus, having pleaded into the qualified privilege, Dent took on himself the burden to plead facts to overcome the privilege—facts showing that “the defendant either intentionally published the material in question and knew the matter was false, or displayed a reckless disregard as to the falsity of the matter.” Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 401.

Dent did not and could not do so. While Dent made conclusory allegations that Person A, B, and C’s statements were false, see A25 (Petition ¶ 16), bare allegations are not enough to overcome the privilege. See, e.g., Colson v. Steig, 86 Ill. App. 3d 993, 998 (2d Dist. 1980) (bare allegations of knowledge of falsity without supporting facts are insufficient to show actual malice); Coghlan, 2013 IL App 1st 120891, ¶ 56 (affirming dismissal of defamation action and holding insufficient plaintiff’s conclusory allegations that the defendant knew the alleged defamatory statements were false).

Constellation also confirmed that “Person C” was in fact the attorneys that Constellation had retained to investigate the allegations, who had identified themselves to Dent during the September 14, 2018 interview, and whose identities were subsequently confirmed by Constellation in a letter that Dent attached to the Petition. See A35 (Ex. B to Petition); A41-A42 (Constellation Mem. in Support of Mot. to Dismiss at 5-6).

C. The Circuit Court's Dismissal of the Petition.

The Circuit Court did not reach the question of qualified privilege. Instead, it dismissed the case on the ground that Dent knew the identity of a party potentially responsible for damages, namely, Constellation and its attorneys, so the purpose of Rule 224 had been accomplished. See A49 (Mem. Opinion & Order at 2); Low Cost Movers v. Craigslist, Inc., 2015 IL App (1st) 143955, ¶ 17. With knowledge of the identity of one potential defendant, a Rule 224 petitioner can file a case and use ordinary discovery to learn the identity of other potential defendants. See 735 ILCS 5/2-402.

D. The Appellate Court Decision.

The Appellate Court reversed. First, it rejected the Circuit Court's reasoning. The Appellate Court acknowledged that "[o]nce a potential defendant's identity is learned, a petitioner can then file a case and use either the discovery provisions of the rules or the Code to conduct full discovery of those named as respondents-in-discovery to determine who in fact was responsible." A10 (Opinion ¶ 25). The Appellate Court reasoned that Constellation and its attorneys were not alleged to have published any statement about Dent, and thus were not among the parties potentially liable for damages. A12 (Opinion ¶ 28). However, Dent specifically sought the identity of "Person C" in order to bring a defamation suit against them, and Constellation has acknowledged that "Person C" were its attorneys who investigated the harassment claim. These attorneys/investigators had previously been disclosed to Dent in the letter attached as Exhibit B to the Petition. A35. Apparently focusing only on the four corners of the petition itself and ignoring that Exhibit, in contravention of 735 ILCS 5/2-606, the Appellate Court held that “in the instant case no potential defendant has been identified.” A14 (Opinion ¶ 32).

Next, the Appellate Court addressed Constellation’s arguments concerning qualified privilege. The Appellate Court acknowledged that Rule 224 allows pre-suit discovery when such discovery is “necessary,” A17 (Opinion ¶ 41), and “[t]o ascertain whether petitioners satisfied Rule 224’s necessity requirement, the court must evaluate whether they presented sufficient allegations of a defamation claim to withstand a section 2-615 motion to dismiss.” Id.

The Appellate Court did not question that the allegations of the Petition themselves established that the allegedly defamatory statements were made in the context of an employer’s sexual harassment investigation. But nevertheless, the Appellate Court held that dismissal was improper, because “[p]rivilege is an affirmative defense that ... should not be considered when resolving a section 2-615 motion to dismiss.” A18 (Opinion ¶ 44). Thus, the allegations in the Petition were “sufficient to withstand dismissal under a section 2-615 analysis.” A20 (Opinion ¶ 47).

ARGUMENT

I. The Appellate Court’s Refusal to Apply a Qualified Privilege Conflicts With Other Decisions from This Court and the Appellate Court.

The Appellate Court’s holding in this case—refusing to dismiss a Rule 224 petition under Section 2-615 because privilege is an affirmative defense, even though the petition itself pleaded all the facts necessary to establish the privilege, A18-A19 (Opinion ¶¶ 43-44)—conflicts with the rule applied by this Court and the Appellate Court in cases involving a complaint. Those other cases hold that dismissal under Section 2-615 is proper when a complaint pleads all the facts necessary to establish a qualified privilege and fails to plead facts to overcome it.

For example, in K. Miller Co., Inc. v. McGinnis, 238 Ill.2d 284 (2010), this Court held that “[a]n affirmative defense may be raised in a section 2-615 motion where the defense is ‘established by the facts apparent on the face of the complaint’ and no other facts alleged in the complaint negate the defense.” Id. at 292 (quoting 3 R. Michael, Illinois Practice § 27.2, at 492 (1989)).

Likewise, in Pompa v. Swanson, 2013 IL App (2d) 120911, the Second District dismissed a complaint under Section 2-615 when its “allegations, even when viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, are insufficient to overcome the qualified privilege at issue here.” Id. at ¶ 31.

The First District, too, has dismissed a complaint under Section 2-615 when the complaint pleads the existence of a qualified privilege. The court held: “Privilege is an affirmative defense that may be raised as a basis for dismissal of a defamation action ... even in a section 2-615 motion if the defense is apparent on the face of the complaint.” Dobias v. Oak Park & River Forest High Sch. Dist. 200, 2016 IL App (1st) 152205, ¶ 106; see also O’Callaghan v. Satherlie, 2015 IL App (1st) 142152, ¶ 18 (holding that “a defendant may properly raise an affirmative defense in a section 2-615 motion if the defense is apparent from the face of the complaint”).

The only way to reconcile this well-established precedent and the Appellate Court’s decision in this case is to view the Appellate Court as applying a more stringent standard under Section 2-615 in cases involving Rule 224 petitions. But there is no justification for applying a more stringent standard. As this Court has held, a Section 2-615 motion is an appropriate way to test the sufficiency of a Rule 224 petition—and Section 2-615 means the same thing regardless of the context in which the motion is filed. See Hadley, 2015 IL 118000, ¶ 27 (stating that a Rule 224 petition fails to satisfy the “necessity requirement” if it cannot “withstand a section 2-615 motion to dismiss.”).

Accordingly, this Court’s review is warranted to reconcile the conflict between the Appellate Court’s decision in this case and other precedent, including from this Court. To the extent the Appellate Court did not intend to apply a different standard to Rule 224 petitions than to a complaint, then its holding flatly conflicts with this Court’s case law and other decisions of the Appellate Court, and review is warranted for that reason.

This Court should grant the petition for leave to appeal and confirm that under a Rule 224 petition, just as under a complaint, a Section 2-615 dismissal is proper when a qualified privilege is apparent from the face of the petition and the petition fails to plead the facts necessary to overcome it.

As this Court has explained, one can overcome the privilege by alleging concrete facts establishing, for example, that the allegedly defamatory statements were fabricated, that the employer conducted an investigation that was reckless in its disregard for the truth or disregarded company policy, or that the findings of the investigation were improperly disseminated. See, e.g., Kuwik, 156 Ill. 2d at 30 (to establish abuse of privilege, plaintiff would need to demonstrate a reckless investigation or improper dissemination of the findings); Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 404–05 (no abuse of the privilege where there is no “concrete evidence to support the notion that [the company’s] employees fabricated stories,” and where “employees deliberately followed company personnel policies in accordance with federal law and investigated allegations into plaintiff’s conduct before taking action”).

Here, however, Dent did not make any such allegations. Instead, he merely alleged that the allegedly defamatory statements were false—not even knowingly or recklessly so, let alone with facts in support. A25 (Petition ¶ 16). That is insufficient to plead an abuse of the privilege. See e.g., Coghlan, 2013 IL App (1st) 120891, ¶ 56; Colson, 86 Ill. App. 3d at 998.

II. If Left Unaddressed, the Appellate Court’s Decision Will Significantly Undermine the State’s Strong Public Policy Interest in Protecting the Confidentiality of Victims and Witnesses in Employer Investigations of Sexual Harassment.

The Appellate Court’s ruling in this case will cause serious damage to the State’s public policy against workplace sexual harassment, by hampering the ability of employers to preserve the confidentiality of the identities of victims and witnesses who report harassment. Accordingly, this case not only presents a conflict of authority, but also an issue of general importance that warrants the exercise of this Court’s supervisory authority.

A. The State Has a Strong Public Policy Interest in Ensuring That Employees Will Report Workplace Sexual Harassment and That Employers Can Conduct Confidential Investigations of Such Harassment.

Illinois has a strong public policy interest in combatting workplace sexual harassment. The General Assembly has found that “organizational tolerance of sexual harassment has a detrimental influence in workplaces by creating a hostile environment for employees, reducing productivity, and increasing legal liability.” Illinois Human Rights Act, 775 ILCS 5/2-109(A). Accordingly, it has stated its “intent to encourage employers to adopt and actively implement policies to ensure their workplaces are safe for employees to report concerns about sexual harassment without fear of retaliation....” Id.

Federal law likewise prohibits sexual harassment and obligates employers to take steps to prevent it. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1) (Title VII prohibiting sex discrimination); Cerros v. Steel Technologies, Inc., 288 F.3d 1040, 1045 (7th Cir. 2002) (explaining that sexual harassment is a form of sex discrimination, and employers violate Title VII by permitting a sexually hostile work environment).

All in all, there is “a compelling interest in ridding workplaces of sexual harassment,” and employers have an affirmative obligation to “take all steps necessary to prevent sexual harassment from occurring” and to “establish a complaint procedure designed to encourage victims of harassment to come forward.” Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 806 (1998); see also Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 402 (stating that companies have “a compelling interest in ridding workplaces of sexual harassment,” and an affirmative obligation to “take all steps necessary to prevent sexual harassment from occurring.”) (citation omitted).

One critically important component of an effective workplace sexual harassment policy is a reporting mechanism that allows the identities of victims and witnesses to remain confidential. Without that assurance, many victims and witnesses would be unwilling to come forward for fear that they will face retaliation, be branded with a negative reputation, or be denied promotion opportunities. Guidelines promulgated by the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (“EEOC”) confirm that “[t]he employer should ... have a procedure for resolving sexual harassment complaints ... designed to ‘encourage victims of harassment to come forward’ and should not require a victim to complain first to the offending supervisor... It should ensure confidentiality as much as possible and provide effective remedies, including protection of victims and witnesses against retaliation.” U.S. Equal Emp. Opportunity Comm’n, Notice No. 915.050, Policy Guidance on Current Issues of Sexual Harassment, Preventative and Remedial Action, available at <https://www.eeoc.gov/laws/guidance/policy-guidance-current-issues-sexual-harassment>.

Numerous cases confirm that providing victims and witnesses with the assurance of confidentiality not only is a best practice, but also bears on an employer’s liability for allowing a hostile work environment if harassment does occur. See, e.g., Anderson v. Leigh, No. 98 C 50169, 2000 WL 193075, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 10, 2000) (holding that company exercised reasonable care to prevent sexual harassment where, among other things, the company instructed employees to report sexual harassment and promised confidentiality with reasonable parameters); Shaw v. Autozone, Inc., No. 96 C 50111, 1997 WL 587488, at *4 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 19, 1997) (same); Roby v. CWI, Inc., 579 F.3d 779, 786 (7th Cir. 2009) (finding that employer exercised reasonable care where employer performed an investigation, instructed interviewees that the information was confidential, fired one employee when he breached confidentiality, and disciplined supervisor by issuing a written reprimand and ordering him to attend education and retraining classes); see also Workplace Disciplinary Investigations and Confidentiality: Striking the Balance, 50 PRAC. LAW 25, 27-28 (2004) (discussing the importance of confidentiality in sexual harassment investigations and explaining that confidentiality is an influential factor in encouraging employees to report harassment).

B. The Appellate Court's Holding Will Significantly Undermine the State's Public Policy.

Under the Appellate Court's ruling, even when a Rule 224 petition on its face establishes that the allegedly defamatory statements were made in the context of an employer's sexual harassment investigation, and thus are protected by the qualified privilege, the petition still cannot be dismissed—for the technical reason that privilege is an affirmative defense that cannot be considered under Section 2-615. That holding, if left unaddressed, will encourage perpetrators to carry out retaliatory litigation against victims and witnesses who have provided information to their employer as part of a confidential workplace harassment investigation.

Although those individuals, once identified, can still invoke a qualified privilege in defending against a defamation suit, by then it is too late. For many employees—and in particular for victims of sexual harassment—the prospect of being publicly identified,<sup>1</sup> sued, subjected to discovery, and forced to pay for a lawyer to defend against such a suit, will be a strong deterrent to reporting misconduct. “[V]ictims of harassment and companies with a goal of preventing harassment would be ‘handcuffed’ by a fear of defamation liability.”

<sup>1</sup> This case well illustrates this concern. While Constellation has kept its investigation strictly confidential, Dent has chosen to publicly disclose details about the incident, including the statements he alleges defamed him.

Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 402.

Indeed, an EEOC taskforce found that the vast majority of victims never report their experience of sexual harassment. “Employees who experience harassment fail to report the behavior or to file a complaint because they anticipate and fear a number of reactions – disbelief of their claim; inaction on their claim; receipt of blame for causing the offending actions; social retaliation (including humiliation and ostracism); and professional retaliation, such as damage to their career and reputation.” Chai R. Feldblum & Victoria A. Lipnic, U.S. Equal Emp. Opportunity Comm’n, Report of the Co-Chairs of the EEOC Select Task Force on the Study of Harassment in the Workplace (June 2016), at Part II.C), available at <https://www.eeoc.gov/select-task-force-study-harassment-workplace>.

Allowing a harasser to use pre-suit discovery to force the disclosure of the identity of victims and witnesses—even when the Rule 224 petition itself establishes that the victims’ and witnesses’ statements are protected by a qualified privilege and thus cannot give rise to liability—will further discourage victimized employees from coming forward and severely impede employers’ success at ensuring harassment-free workplaces.

Even if an employer could potentially file a Section 2-619 motion to dismiss the Rule 224 petition and raise the qualified privilege in that context, Constellation—and other Rule 224 respondents—should not be required to file a Rule 2-619 motion to invoke the qualified privilege where, as here, all facts giving rise to the privilege are evident from the fact of the Petition and exhibits. A Section 2-619 motion is intended for a situation in which the defendant seeks to introduce affirmative matter outside the four corners of the complaint. But when the allegations of the Rule 224 petition themselves establish the existence of a qualified privilege, the defendant has no need to introduce any affirmative matter. Thus, in that circumstance, Section 2-615 is a more appropriate procedural vehicle for dismissal than Section 2-619. Accordingly, as discussed above, this Court and the Appellate Court routinely hold that a Section 2-615 dismissal is proper. The Court should apply the same Section 2-615 standard to Rule 224 petitions as to complaints, and allow dismissal when the face of the petition establishes a qualified privilege and fails to plead facts to overcome it. Doing so will ensure that victims of sexual harassment can have confidence that their employers' investigations will remain confidential.

The rationale for applying the same rule to Rule 224 petitions as to complaints carries particular force in a situation in which, as here, the Rule 224 petitioner already knows the identity of the investigators retained by the employer to investigate the allegations of harassment and whose report to the employer was alleged to be defamatory. If Dent had brought suit against those outside lawyers and sought to discover the identity of the victims and witnesses through ordinary discovery, the suit would have been dismissed under Section 2-615 before any such discovery could take place because Dent has pleaded facts establishing the qualified privilege but no facts to overcome it. Dent should not be able to take advantage of a stricter standard for Section 2-615 motions in the context of a Rule 224 petition in order to circumvent that outcome. Pre-suit discovery should not give a would-be plaintiff more information than he would have been entitled to if he had brought suit instead.

Applying the same rule to Rule 224 petitions as this Court has applied to complaints will adequately protect meritorious defamation claims, while weeding out meritless claims before the identities of victims and witnesses can be discovered. A defamation plaintiff with a meritorious claim should be able to allege the concrete facts needed to overcome the qualified privilege, and thereby learn the identities of potential defendants through pre-suit discovery. But a defamation plaintiff who cannot do so is simply using pre-suit discovery as the preliminary step to bringing a retaliatory defamation claim—and the same public policy that underlies the qualified privilege should also protect the identity of victims and witnesses at the gate, so that they cannot be made the targets of such suits.

In sum, the Appellate Court's ruling will seriously undermine the State's public policy by strongly deterring victims and witnesses from coming forward to report misconduct—even as many already fear doing so despite the employer's promise of confidentiality.

III. The Appellate Court’s Decision Conflicts With Other Decisions from the Appellate Court for the Additional Reason That It Allows Rule 224 Proceedings to Proceed, Even Though the Petitioner Knows the Identities of Potentially Liable Parties.

The Appellate Court’s decision conflicts with other decisions from the Appellate Court—including from the Fifth District, as well as the First—for an additional reason as well: the exhibits attached to the Petition as well as Constellation’s motion papers establish that Dent in fact knew the identities of “Person C”—the investigators retained by Constellation. See A35 (Ex. B to Petition); A41-A42 (Constellation Mem. in Support of Mot. to Dismiss at 5-6).

Decisions of the First and Fifth Districts hold that once a Rule 224 Petitioner learns the identity of one potential defendant, the purpose of Rule 224 has been served and the petition should be dismissed. At that point, a complaint can be filed, and, if the complaint is viable, further discovery regarding the identity of additional potential defendants can be carried out under the discovery rules governing complaints, see Ill. Sup. Ct. R. 201 et seq., and Section 2-402.<sup>2</sup> That is so even when the identity of a potential defendant is disclosed to the Rule 224 petitioner outside of the pleadings, for example, during oral argument or during a status conference. See, e.g., Roth v. St. Elizabeth’s Hosp., 241 Ill. App. 3d 407, 412–13 (5th Dist. 1993) (once the identity of a person or entity who may be responsible in damages is known, “the purpose of the rule has been accomplished and the action should be dismissed.”); Gaynor v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry., 322 Ill. App. 3d 288, 292, 296 (5th Dist. 2001) (finding that petition exceeded scope of Rule 224 because a potential defendant was already known given that petitioner filed an action against one party on the same day the Rule 224 petition was filed); Malmberg v. Smith, 241 Ill. App. 3d 428, 432 (5th Dist. 1993) (dismissing Rule 224 petition where petitioner’s counsel admitted during oral argument that he knew the identity of a potential libel defendant); Low Cost Movers, 2015 IL App (1st) 143955, ¶¶ 5, 17 (dismissing Rule 224 petition where one potentially liable party was made known to the petitioner during a status conference).

<sup>2</sup> If such a complaint is not viable, then of course further discovery is not warranted. As noted above, see supra at 21, a plaintiff who would not be entitled to discovery if he had filed a complaint should not be able to circumvent that outcome by electing to seek pre-suit discovery under Rule 224 instead.

The Appellate Court—apparently looking only at the four corners of the Petition itself and ignoring even its exhibits—distinguished these cases on the ground that, “in the instant case no potential defendant has been identified.” A14 (Opinion ¶ 32). But as explained above, that is incorrect: the exhibit attached to the Petition and Constellation’s motion papers identified Person C, who Dent alleged published defamatory statements. Accordingly, under the Fifth District’s case law and the First District’s Low Cost Movers decision, “the purpose of the rule has been accomplished and the action should be dismissed.” Roth, 241 Ill. App. 3d at 412-13.

This conflict between the Appellate Court’s decision in this case and the Appellate Court’s other decisions independently warrants this Court’s review.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Petition for Leave to Appeal should be granted.

JUSTICE LAMPKIN delivered the judgment of the court, with opinion.
Presiding Justice Gordon and Justice Reyes concurred in the judgment and opinion.

OPINION

¶ 1 Petitioners, Richard Dent and RLD Resources, LLC (RLD), appeal the circuit court's dismissal with prejudice of their petition for presuit discovery pursuant to Illinois Supreme Court Rule 224 (eff. Jan. 1, 2018). The petition sought disclosure from respondents, Constellation NewEnergy, Inc.; CNE Gas Supply, LLC; Constellation Energy Gas Choice, LLC; and Constellation New Energy-Gas Division, LLC (collectively, Constellation), of the names and addresses of three unidentified people who published allegedly defamatory statements about Dent that caused respondents to terminate their contractual arrangements with petitioners.

¶ 2 On appeal, petitioners argue that the dismissal of their petition should be reversed because the trial court misapplied the law and erroneously treated respondents' motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim as a motion for summary judgment. Specifically, petitioners argue that they met their burden to show this discovery was necessary because they pled sufficient allegations of a defamation claim to overcome a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

¶ 3 For the reasons that follow, we reverse the judgment of the circuit court.<sup>1</sup>

¶ 4 I. BACKGROUND

¶ 5 On March 18, 2019, petitioners filed a verified petition for presuit discovery against Constellation. Petitioners alleged that prior to October 2018, they were party to several energy supply and marketing contracts with Constellation and all of these contracts were terminable at will.

¶ 6 Petitioners alleged that, in September 2018, two attorneys representing Constellation—Grace Speights and Theos McKinney III—visited petitioners' office and told Dent that certain allegations had been made against him. Specifically, a woman, who was a Constellation employee and whom Constellation's attorneys refused to identify (Person A), alleged that Dent, in June 2016 at a Constellation-sponsored golfing event in the Philadelphia area, said to her that "she had a butt like a sister." Person A also alleged that Dent, in July 2018 at another Constellation-sponsored pregolf party on the patio of the Chicago Shedd Aquarium, groped her. Furthermore, in connection with the same July 2018 golf event, Constellation had arranged for the distribution of guest passes, polo shirts and similar items at the Marriott Hotel on Adams Street in Chicago, and a man, whom Constellation's attorneys refused to identify (Person B), told Constellation that he had observed Dent at the hotel collecting the golf materials and that Dent was drunk and disorderly at that time.

¶ 7 The petition alleged that Dent told Constellation's attorneys at that September 2018 meeting that all of these allegations were completely false and that the attorneys responded that Constellation would review its contractual arrangements with Dent and RLD as a result of these allegations. On October 1, 2018, Constellation sent Dent and RLD a notice terminating all of Constellation's contracts with them. This termination notice was included as an exhibit to the petition. Another petition exhibit, a December 2019 letter from Constellation's counsel to petitioners' counsel, stated that Constellation had hired a third party, whom Constellation refused to identify (Person C),<sup>2</sup> to investigate the claims against Dent. This letter also stated that Dent's denials were not credible and that the investigation concluded that the reports accurately described behavior that violated the company's code of conduct, was outside the norms of socially acceptable behavior, and demeaned Constellation employees. The petition alleged, on information and belief, that Person C investigated the claims against Dent before the termination notice was issued and that Person C published or republished to Constellation the statements of Persons A and B.

¶ 8 The petition concluded with allegations that the statements published by Persons A, B, and C concerning Dent were made as statements of fact, were false, were not privileged, and were the cause in fact and proximate cause of Constellation's termination of all its contractual arrangements with petitioners. Furthermore, the statements imputed to Dent acts of moral turpitude and impugned his character, reputation and good name. The petition asserted that Persons A, B, and C may be responsible in damages to petitioners and that this presuit discovery was necessary because Constellation refused to provide to petitioners the names and addresses of Persons A, B, and C.

¶ 9 Constellation moved to dismiss the petition under section 2-615 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code) (735 ILCS 5/2-615 (West 2018)), arguing that the petition was substantially insufficient because the alleged defamatory statements were qualifiedly privileged and that petitioners failed to allege facts showing that the privilege was abused. In this motion, Constellation disclosed that Person B was an employee and made the alleged defamatory statements, which described his observations of Dent on the day in question, in the course of Constellation's investigation of Person A's allegations. Constellation also disclosed that Persons C were the attorneys Constellation retained to investigate Person A's allegations.

¶ 10 Specifically, Constellation argued that the alleged defamatory statements were qualifiedly privileged as a matter of law as statements made to an employer by a victim of sexual harassment concerning inappropriate touching experienced while at work (Person A), statements made to the employer by a witness (Person B) as part of Constellation's investigation consistent with its legal obligations, and statements of the investigators/lawyers (Persons C) relating their findings to Constellation. Constellation also argued that petitioners failed to allege facts sufficient to overcome this qualified privilege, i.e., by alleging facts that, if true, would suffice to demonstrate a direct intent to injure petitioners or a reckless disregard for their rights.

¶ 11 Furthermore, Constellation urged the court to dismiss the petition with prejudice and not allow petitioners leave to replead because, according to Constellation, any amendment would be futile where Constellation had retained third-party counsel to conduct an independent, attorney-client privileged investigation of the allegations, that investigation included meeting with Dent to inform him of the allegations and obtain his side of the story, Constellation weighed the evidence and decided in good faith to credit its employees' version of events, there was no basis to infer any knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard for the truth, and Constellation did not disclose the findings of the investigation to any third party, other than in privileged communications with its lawyers.

¶ 12 In their response, petitioners argued that Constellation's section 2-615 motion to dismiss should be denied on procedural and substantive grounds. First, although Constellation presented its motion as a section 2-615 motion to dismiss, which attacks only the legal sufficiency of the complaint and defects apparent on the face of the complaint, Constellation improperly introduced new facts regarding Persons B and C and evidence that attacked the factual, rather than the legal, sufficiency of the Rule 224 petition. Constellation also improperly raised the affirmative defense of qualified privilege in its section 2-615 motion to dismiss. Second, Constellation's motion failed under section 2-615 of the Code because the court must accept as true all well-pleaded facts and any reasonable inferences arising therefrom and should not dismiss the Rule 224 petition unless it was apparent that no set of facts could be proved that would entitle petitioners to a judgment in their favor. Petitioners argued that their alleged facts—that three unidentified people fabricated and published completely false and defamatory stories about Dent and then published those stories to a third-party—are more than sufficient to state a prima facie defamation case and defeat any qualified privilege claim.

¶ 13 In its reply, Constellation argued that petitioners' allegations, taken as true, established that the allegedly defamatory statements were qualifiedly privileged because all of the statements were made by an employee victim, a witness, and investigators as part of an employer's sexual harassment investigation and that petitioners failed to plead facts showing that the alleged defamatory statements were intentionally false.

¶ 14 In June 2019, the trial court dismissed petitioners' Rule 224 petition with prejudice, determining sua sponte to dispose of the petition for failure to comply with Rule 224. Specifically, the court, citing Low Cost Movers, Inc. v. Craigslist, Inc., 2015 IL App (1st) 143955, found that a Rule 224 petition was an inappropriate vehicle to attempt to learn the names of Persons A, B, and C because petitioners knew the identities of the Constellation respondents and their attorneys, Rule 224 was satisfied once a petitioner has identified someone who may be sued, and the Constellation respondents may be liable for damages.

¶ 15 Petitioners moved the court to reconsider its dismissal of the petition with prejudice, arguing that their Rule 224 petition was not the type of impermissible fishing expedition disfavored by the law because petitioners knew everything necessary to bring a defamation action against Persons A, B, and C except their identities. Furthermore, the Constellation respondents-in-discovery did not identify themselves or anyone else as a party who had engaged in the defamation of Dent.

¶ 16 In its response, Constellation argued that the trial court's dismissal of the Rule 224 petition with prejudice was correct because, in accordance with relevant case law, Rule 224's purpose was satisfied since petitioners already knew the identity of a party—namely, Constellation—that was involved in the events that gave rise to the termination of the at-will contracts between petitioners and Constellation. Constellation argued that the absence of a viable claim against it did not mean that Rule 224 discovery continued until petitioners ascertained the identity of a party that engaged in the wrongdoing that coincided with petitioners' defamation cause of action. In addition, Constellation argued that dismissal of the Rule 224 petition was also proper based on the qualified privilege that covers statements made during the course of an employer's sexual harassment investigation and that petitioners failed to overcome this privilege by alleging facts demonstrating an abuse of that privilege.

¶ 17 After hearing oral argument, the trial court issued a July 2019 written order denying petitioners' motion to reconsider the dismissal. The court stated that the specific, narrow purpose of Rule 224 allows a petitioner to obtain the identity of a potential defendant when the petitioner lacks knowledge of anyone who may be liable in damages but the record here established that petitioners had knowledge that Constellation may be liable in damages based on the terminated contracts.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Presuit Discovery Under Rule 224

¶ 21 Petitioners argue the trial court erred in ruling that Low Cost Movers, Inc. required dismissal with prejudice of their Rule 224 petition. Specifically, petitioners argue that the trial court's ruling undermined the purpose of Rule 224, the alleged facts in their petition showed that no cause of action lies against Constellation or its attorneys for either defamation or breach of contract, and Low Cost Movers, Inc. was distinguishable from this case.

¶ 22 This court generally reviews the trial court's ruling pursuant to Rule 224 for an abuse of discretion. Maxon v. Ottawa Publishing Co., 402 Ill. App. 3d 704, 711 (2010). However, statutory construction constitutes a question of law, which we review de novo. Sardiga v. Northern Trust

No. 1-19-1652

Co., 409 Ill. App. 3d 56, 61 (2011); see also Thomas v. Weatherguard Construction Co., 2015 IL App (1st) 142785, ¶ 63 (de novo consideration means the appellate court performs the same analysis that a trial judge would perform). Rule 224, titled “Discovery Before Suit to Identify Responsible Persons and Entities,” provides in pertinent part as follows:

“(a) Procedure.

(1) Petition.

(i) A person or entity who wishes to engage in discovery for the sole purpose of ascertaining the identity of one who may be responsible in damages may file an independent action for such discovery.

(ii) The action for discovery shall be initiated by the filing of a verified petition in the circuit court of the county in which the action or proceeding might be brought or in which one or more of the persons or entities from whom discovery is sought resides. The petition shall be brought in the name of the petitioner and shall name as respondents the persons or entities from whom discovery is sought and shall set forth: (A) the reason the proposed discovery is necessary and (B) the nature of the discovery sought and shall ask for an order authorizing the petitioner to obtain such discovery. The order allowing the petition will limit discovery to the identification of responsible persons and entities and where a deposition is sought will specify the name and address of each person to be examined, if known, or, if unknown, information sufficient to identify each person and the time and place of the deposition.” (Emphases added.)

Ill. S. Ct. R. 224(a)(1) (eff. Jan. 1, 2018).

¶ 23 It is well settled that our rules are to be construed in the same manner as statutes (Ill. S. Ct. R. 2 (eff. July 1, 2017); People v. Norris, 214 Ill. 2d 92, 97 (2005)), and the cardinal rule of interpreting statutes is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the legislature (McNamee v. Federated Equipment & Supply Co., 181 Ill. 2d 415, 423 (1998)). The best evidence of such intent is the statutory language itself, which is to be given its plain meaning. Johnston v. Weil, 241 Ill. 2d 169, 175 (2011). Where the meaning is unclear, courts may consider the law’s purpose and the evils the law was intended to remedy. Id. at 175-76. A statute’s language is ambiguous when it is capable of being understood by reasonably well-informed individuals in multiple ways. MD Electrical Contractors, Inc. v. Abrams, 228 Ill. 2d 281, 288 (2008). Although a court should first consider the language of the statute or rule, a court must presume that the court in promulgating a rule, like the legislature in enacting a statute, did not intend absurdity or injustice. See State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. v. Yapejian, 152 Ill. 2d 533, 540-41 (1992).

¶ 24 The plain language of Rule 224 allows a petitioner to engage in discovery to ascertain the identity of multiple persons and entities who may be responsible in damages. The court’s clear intent in promulgating Rule 224 was to provide a mechanism to enable a person or entity, before filing a lawsuit and with leave of court, to identify parties who may be responsible in damages; however, the court’s order allowing the petition will limit discovery to the identification of responsible persons and entities. Roth v. St. Elizabeth’s Hospital, 241 Ill. App. 3d 407, 414 (1993) (citing Ill. S. Ct. R. 224, Committee Comments (adopted Aug. 1, 1989)); see also Shutes v. Fowler,

No. 1-19-1652

223 Ill. App. 3d 342, 345-46 (1991) (Rule 224 allows a party to engage in limited presuit discovery about the identity of those who may be responsible in damages “to streamline the court process”).

¶ 25 “[T]he only use and purpose of Rule 224 is to ascertain the identity of a potential defendant.” (Emphasis omitted.) Roth, 241 Ill. App. 3d at 416. Once a potential defendant’s identity is learned, a petitioner can then file a case and use either the discovery provisions of the rules or the Code to conduct full discovery of those named as respondents-in-discovery to determine who in fact was responsible, i.e., liable. Id. In Roth, the petitioner already knew the identity of several healthcare providers who might have been responsible in damages for the decedent’s treatment. Id. at 419. Nevertheless, the petitioner was still allowed under Rule 224 to obtain the name of an additional doctor who acted as a consultant but whose identity was not revealed by the hospital records. Id. The court, however, ruled that the petitioner was not allowed to use Rule 224 to conduct a fishing expedition for information about a physician’s impressions of the decedent’s medical conditions and whether the physician had ordered tests to determine whether the decedent had sepsis. Id. at 420.

¶ 26 In Beale v. EdgeMark Financial Corp., 279 Ill. App. 3d 242, 244 (1996), a stock pledger, who claimed that his stock was sold at a time when the directors had reason to believe that the sale of the corporation was imminent, filed a Rule 224 petition for presuit discovery that went beyond the names and addresses of people who could be responsible in damages. When he filed his petition, he knew the identity of at least one defendant. Id. The trial court ruled that the petitioner was entitled to discovery of a document that constituted the corporation’s full response to an inquiry from its regulatory agency because the court believed the document would identify certain people who could be responsible in damages. Id. at 245. Specifically, the agency had sent the corporation a list of the names and addresses of 36 individuals and married couples and asked the corporation to identify whether the listed people had any affiliation with the corporation that could have made them privy to nonpublic information about the corporation's activities regarding the issue in question. Id. at 247.

¶ 27 This court affirmed the trial court, stating that the document was within the scope of Rule 224 because the mere list of 36 names and addresses did little if anything to narrow the universe of potential defendants from the general members of the stock-purchasing public and the document included additional connecting facts to establish which people were affiliated with the corporation without disclosing specific facts of insider trading or actual acts of wrongdoing. Id. at 253-54. Moreover, this court rejected the argument that the petitioner was not entitled to use Rule 224 because he already knew the identity of some defendants and had even filed a federal lawsuit against them, which was pending at the time the trial court ruled on the Rule 224 petition. Id. at 251 n.3. This court explained that “Roth did not hold that Rule 224 discovery [was] not permitted where the petitioner knows the name of a potential defendant”; rather, the petition in Roth was denied because it sought specific information concerning actual liability. Id.; see also Malmberg v. Smith, 241 Ill. App. 3d 428 (1993) (petitioner, who already knew the identity of the potential libel defendant, a coemployee, and knew that he had accused the petitioner of illegal drug use while on duty, could not use Rule 224 to discover the contents of the coemployee's statement); Guertin v. Guertin, 204 Ill. App. 3d 527, 531 (1990) (petitioners, who speculated that their sister-in-law had exerted undue influence in the execution of a will by a deceased relative, could not use Rule 224 to depose the sister-in-law and bank officials before the filing of a complaint because the identity of the defendant was already known).

¶ 28 Based on the plain language of Rule 224 and the relevant caselaw, we find that the trial court abused its discretion when it sua sponte dismissed the petition with prejudice based on the trial court's determination that presuit discovery of the identity of Persons A, B, and C was not necessary because petitioners knew the identity of Constellation and its attorneys. The trial court's ruling does not comport with the intent of Rule 224 to assist a potential plaintiff in seeking redress against people or entities if the potential plaintiff meets the requirement to demonstrate the reason why the proposed discovery seeking the identity of certain individuals is necessary. Here, petitioners met that requirement, alleging that Persons A and B made completely false defamatory statements about Dent and then published those statements to Person C, an investigator, who then reported the defamatory statements to Constellation, which terminated its at-will contracts with petitioners. As discussed below, at this phase of the proceedings, any affirmative defense of a qualified privilege was not relevant in determining whether petitioners met the requirement to show the necessity of presuit discovery under Rule 224. Under the facts as alleged by petitioners and contrary to the trial court's ruling, Constellation and its attorneys were not "individuals or entities who stand in the universe of potential defendants" responsible in damages for defamation or breach of contract. Beale, 279 Ill. App. 3d at 252. Constellation and its attorneys were not the entity or people who made the alleged false and defamatory statements about Dent's conduct at the events sponsored by Constellation; they were merely participants in the subsequent investigation of the alleged defamatory statements that resulted in the termination of petitioners' at-will contracts.

¶ 29 The extent of a petitioner's permissible inquiry to limit or define the universe of potential defendants "must be determined by the trial judge on a case-by-case basis and in consideration of the cause of action alleged. When in the trial court's discretion the petitioner seeks to establish actual liability or responsibility rather than potentiality for liability, discovery should be denied." Id. at 252-53. Here, however, since the sought-after information of the identity of Persons A, B, and C pertained only to their potential for liability and not to actual liability, the allowance of that discovery would not have exceeded the scope of Rule 224. Therefore, it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court to sua sponte dismiss with prejudice petitioners' Rule 224 petition. "In reaching this conclusion, we are mindful of concerns regarding [the] use of Rule 224 to conduct fishing expeditions" (id. at 254) and opening the lid to Pandora's box to enable every potential plaintiff with competent counsel to push the limits of permissible presuit discovery beyond the identity of responsible persons (Roth, 241 Ill. App. 3d at 421 (Lewis, J., specially concurring)). "However, we correspondingly recognize the need to allow the trial court to exercise its discretion within the scope and latitude of the rule, to establish boundaries, given the nature of the case before it, and to grant limited discovery to acquire information which would suggest the potentiality of liability so as to make the subsequent filing of a lawsuit a fruitful pursuit." Beale, 279 Ill. App. 3d at 254.

¶ 30 Finally, Low Cost Movers, Inc., does not support the trial court's determination that presuit discovery under Rule 224 was not necessary based on petitioners' knowledge of the identity of Constellation, the respondent-in-discovery, and its attorneys. In Low Cost Movers, Inc., the petitioner, an online advertiser alleged that its ads had been flagged and deleted from a website since 2011 and sought presuit discovery from the respondent-in-discovery, the website operator, to obtain the identity of anyone who had flagged the advertiser's advertisements for removal from the website. 2015 IL App (1st) 143955, ¶ 4. The respondent disclosed that since 2014 it had removed, on its own initiative, all of the advertiser's ads based on violations of respondent's terms of use. Id. ¶ 5. The respondent asked the petitioner to propose a limited date range so that respondent could assess the cost and feasibility of running a search to identify who had flagged petitioner's ads before 2014. Id. ¶ 6. After the petitioner failed to provide any proposed dates, the respondent argued that it had complied with its obligations under Rule 224, and the trial court sua sponte dismissed the petitioner's Rule 224 petition. Id.

¶ 31 Thereafter, the petitioner moved to vacate the dismissal, conceding that the respondent had identified itself as one potential defendant but arguing that petitioner should still be allowed to discover if others might have flagged its ads before 2014. Id. ¶ 7. The respondent argued that there was every reason to believe it had removed the ads before 2014. Id. The trial court denied the motion to vacate, finding that the purpose of Rule 224 had been satisfied because at least one potential defendant had been identified. Id. The reviewing court stated that "Rule 224 was not intended to permit a party to engage in a wide-ranging, vague, and speculative quest to determine whether a cause of action actually exist[ed]" and held that the trial court's dismissal of the petition was not an abuse of discretion based on the respondent's disclosure of itself as a potential defendant and the petitioner's failure to provide any date range to limit the respondent's search. Id. ¶¶ 17-18.

¶ 32 Unlike Low Cost Movers, Inc., in the instant case no potential defendant has been identified. Furthermore, petitioners' discovery request was not a wide-ranging, vague, and speculative quest to determine whether a cause of action actually existed. Petitioners are not speculating that someone may have defamed Dent; Constellation told petitioners that three specific although unnamed people had made specific factual allegations about Dent.

¶ 33 For the foregoing reasons, we reverse the trial court's dismissal with prejudice of petitioners' Rule 224 petition to discover the identity of Persons A, B, and C.

B. Sufficiency of the Rule 224 Petition

¶ 35 Petitioners contend that Constellation improperly cloaked a motion for summary judgment as a section 2-615 motion to dismiss and introduced new facts not contained in the Rule 224 petition or its exhibits to assert affirmative defenses based on claims of attorney-client privilege and the qualified privilege of an employee to report harassment to an employer. These new facts included Person B's status as a Constellation employee, Person B somehow witnessing the alleged sexual harassment of Person A even though they were at different locations at the time in question, and Person C's status as an attorney.

¶ 36 Petitioners argue that, for purposes of withstanding a 2-615 motion to dismiss, their petition sufficiently alleged all the required elements of a defamation claim against Persons A, B, and C where petitioners alleged that the statements about Dent were defamatory because they imputed to him acts of moral turpitude and impugned his character, good name, and reputation; the statements were completely false, were made as statements of fact, and were not privileged; and the statements caused Constellation to terminate several contracts with petitioners, who suffered damages as a result. Petitioners also argue that, in the context of a section 2-615 motion to dismiss, the issue of the existence of a qualified privilege for the defamatory statements must be determined based on the facts alleged in their Rule 224 petition and the court must interpret the allegations in the light most favorable to petitioners and accept as true all well-pleaded facts and reasonable inferences that can be drawn from those facts.

¶ 37 Constellation does not challenge petitioners' allegations on the bases that either the alleged defamatory statements did not harm Dent's reputation or that the harm was not obvious and apparent on the face of the statements or that Dent admitted committing the acts alleged in the statements or that the statements were reasonably capable of an innocent construction or the statements were merely expressions of opinion.

¶ 38 Instead, Constellation argues that the discovery petitioners seek is not necessary because the petition does not state a claim for defamation. Specifically, Constellation argues that the alleged defamatory statements were all qualifiedly privileged and that petitioners failed to overcome that privilege by pleading sufficient facts to demonstrate that the privilege was abused. Constellation asserts that (1) Person A's statements were qualifiedly privileged as statements by a victim of sexual harassment to an investigator engaged by her employer, (2) Person B's statements were qualifiedly privileged because he was a witness who related to the investigator observations of Dent at an event during the same July 2018 golf outing where one of the alleged incidents of harassment occurred, and (3) the statements by Person C, the investigator hired by Constellation, relating the findings of that investigation to Constellation were also qualifiedly privileged.

¶ 39 Constellation argues that petitioners' conclusory allegation that the statements were false does not meet their burden to allege specific facts showing abuse of the privilege. According to Constellation, the facts alleged in the petition tended to show that Constellation and the alleged speakers did not recklessly disregard the truth or falsity of the statements because Constellation retained an outside investigator to investigate the allegations of sexual harassment, the investigator interviewed the victim and witness and then met with Dent and gave him the opportunity to explain his side of the story, Dent's denial of the allegations was found not credible, and Constellation kept the findings of the investigation confidential, disclosing them only in privileged communications with its lawyers.

No. 1-19-1652

¶ 40 Although the issue of whether a qualified privilege exists is a question of law for the court, the issue of whether the privilege was abused is a question of fact for the jury. See Kuwik v. Starmark Star Marketing & Administration, Inc., 156 Ill. 2d 16, 25 (1993). Statements covered by a qualified privilege may still be actionable if the privilege is abused. Gibson v. Philip Morris, Inc., 292 Ill. App. 3d 267, 275 (1997). An abuse of a qualified privilege may consist of any reckless act that shows a disregard for the defamed party's rights, including the failure to properly investigate the truth of the matter, to limit the scope of the material, or to send the material to only the proper parties. Kuwik, 156 Ill. 2d at 31-32.

¶ 41 Rule 224 requires petitioners to demonstrate that discovery of the identity of the individuals designated as Persons A, B, and C was necessary. See Hadley v. Subscriber Doe, 2015 IL 118000, ¶ 25. To ascertain whether petitioners satisfied Rule 224's necessity requirement, the court must evaluate whether they presented sufficient allegations of a defamation claim to withstand a section 2-615 motion to dismiss. See id. at 27. In the context of a Rule 224 petition, a section 2-615 motion to dismiss tests the legal sufficiency of a petition by asking whether the allegations of that petition, when viewed in the light most favorable to the petitioner, state sufficient facts to establish a cause of action upon which relief may be granted. See id. ¶ 29.

“All facts apparent from the face of the [petition], including any attached exhibits, must be considered. A circuit court should not dismiss a [petition] under section 2-615 unless it is clearly apparent no set of facts can be proved that would entitle the [petitioner] to recovery. [Citation.] The standard of review is de novo. [Citation.]

To state a cause of action for defamation, a [petitioner] must present facts showing the [potential] defendant made a false statement about the [petitioner], the

No. 1-19-1652

[potential] defendant made an unprivileged publication of that statement to a third party, and the publication caused damages. [Citation.] A defamatory statement is one that harms a person's reputation because it lowers the person in the eyes of others or deters others from associating with her or him. [Citation.]" Id. ¶¶ 29-30.

¶ 42 Constellation brought its motion to dismiss pursuant to section 2-615 of the Code, but its arguments rest on its contention that the alleged defamatory statements are protected by a qualified privilege for statements made in the reporting and investigation of sexual harassment in the workplace. Constellation argues this privilege should bar disclosure of the identity of Persons A, B, and C because petitioners failed to overcome this privilege by alleging facts showing an abuse of that privilege. We disagree.

¶ 43 Facts not alleged in or attached to the complaint cannot support a section 2-615 motion. Gilmore v. Stanmar, Inc., 261 Ill. App. 3d 651, 654 (1994). In essence, Constellation's argument raises an affirmative defense and improperly attempts to introduce at this presuit stage new facts to support its affirmative defense of a qualified privilege. If allowed, such a maneuver would prejudice petitioners, whose response to the affirmative defense would be hindered based on their inability to conduct any discovery without knowing the identity of Persons A, B, and C.

¶ 44 Privilege is an affirmative defense that may be susceptible to resolution by a motion for summary judgment or a motion to dismiss under section 2-619 of the Code (735 ILCS 5/2-619 (West 2018)) (see Johnson v. Johnson & Bell, Ltd., 2014 IL App (1st) 122677, ¶ 15), but privilege should not be considered when resolving a section 2-615 motion to dismiss (see Becker v. Zellner, 292 Ill. App. 3d 116, 122 (1997) (generally, "affirmative defenses may not be raised in a section 2-615 motion"); Maxon, 402 Ill. App. 3d at 712 (an affirmative defense is not considered under a section 2-615 analysis)). We will confine our review to the standards for reviewing section 2-615 motions and not consider alleged facts not shown on the face of the petition or in its attached exhibits. See Visvardis v. Ferleger, 375 Ill. App. 3d 719, 724 (2007).

¶ 45 “[A] court must take as true all well-pled allegations of fact contained in the complaint and construe all reasonable inferences therefrom in favor of the plaintiff.” Vernon v. Schuster, 179 Ill. 2d 338, 341 (1997). In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the court will construe pleadings liberally. Pfendler v. Anshe Emet Day School, 81 Ill. App. 3d 818, 821 (1980). However, the court will not admit conclusions of law and conclusory allegations not supported by specific facts. Village of South Elgin v. Waste Management of Illinois, Inc., 348 Ill. App. 3d 929, 930-31 (2004). “A plaintiff is not required to prove his case in the pleading stage; rather, he must merely allege sufficient facts to state all the elements which are necessary to constitute his cause of action.” Claire Associates v. Pontikes, 151 Ill. App. 3d 116, 123 (1986).

¶ 46 Defamation can be either defamation per se or defamation per quod. Stone v. Paddock Publications, Inc., 2011 IL App (1st) 093386, ¶ 24. A statement is defamatory per se if its harm is obvious and apparent on its face. Id. ¶ 25. When a statement is defamatory per se, a plaintiff need not plead actual damage to his or her reputation because the statement is deemed to be so obviously and materially harmful that injury to the plaintiff’s reputation is presumed. Id. However, because a claim of defamation per se relieves a plaintiff of the obligation to prove actual damages, it must be pled with a heightened level of precision and particularity. Id. Illinois recognizes five categories of statements that are defamatory per se: (1) words imputing the commission of a criminal offense, (2) words imputing an infection with a loathsome communicable disease, (3) words imputing an individual’s inability to perform his employment duties or a lack of integrity in performing those duties, (4) words imputing a lack of ability in an individual's profession or prejudicing an individual in his or her profession, and (5) words imputing an individual's engagement in fornication or adultery. Id. The third and fourth categories are generally relevant here: words prejudicing Dent in his profession and imputing a lack of integrity based on his alleged drunk and disorderly condition at an event sponsored by Constellation, a party engaged in several contracts with Dent and his firm, and his alleged sexual harassment of a Constellation employee at that event.

¶ 47 Petitioners alleged that Person A falsely stated that Dent verbally and physically sexually harassed her at two events sponsored by her employer, Constellation. Additionally, petitioners alleged that Person B falsely stated that Dent was drunk and disorderly at the Constellation-sponsored event in Chicago. Persons A and B then reported these false statements to Person C, an unknown investigator, who then reported this information to Constellation, which decided to terminate its contracts with petitioners based on its investigation regarding the false statements. These allegations are sufficient to withstand dismissal under a section 2-615 analysis, which does not consider affirmative defenses like the alleged existence of a qualified privilege.

¶ 48 III. CONCLUSION

¶ 49 For the foregoing reasons, we reverse the judgment of the circuit court that dismissed with prejudice petitioners' Rule 224 presuit discovery petition and remand this cause for further proceedings consistent with this order.

¶ 50 Reversed and remanded.

Richard L. Dent and RLD Resources,

Petitioners,

v.

Constellation NewEnergy, Inc.; CNE
Gas Supply, LLC; Constellation Energy
Gas Choice, LLC; and Constellation
NewEnergy - Gas Division, LLC,

Respondents in Discovery.

Verified Petition Under Supreme Court Rule 224 for Discovery Before Suit to Identify Responsible Persons

NOW COME Petitioners, Richard L. Dent ("Dent") and RLD Resources, L.L.C., a Delaware limited liability company ("RLD Resources") (collectively, "Petitioners"), by and through their attorney, Law Offices of Paul G Neilan, P.C., with their Verified Petition Under Supreme Court Rule 224 for Discovery Before Suit to Identify Responsible Persons (this "Petition"), and in support hereof Petitioners state as follows:

1. Mr. Dent is the Chief Executive Officer of, and owns all of the membership interests in, RLD Resources.
2. RLD Resources is a Delaware limited liability company, and is qualified to do business in Illinois as a foreign limited liability company.
3. RLD Resources' offices are located at 333 North Michigan Avenue, Suite 1810, Chicago, Cook County, Illinois.

4. Each of Respondents maintains a registered agent at c/o Corporate Creations Network, Inc., 350 S. Northwest Highway, #300, Park Ridge, Cook County, Illinois.

5. Prior to October 2018 Petitioners were party to several contracts with Constellation NewEnergy, Inc., a Delaware corporation ("CNE"); CNE Gas Supply, LLC, a Delaware limited liability company ("CNE Gas Supply"); Constellation Energy Gas Choice, LLC, a Delaware limited liability company ("CNE Gas Choice"); and Constellation NewEnergy - Gas Division, LLC, a Kentucky limited liability company ("CNE Gas Division") (CNE, CNE Gas Supply, CNE Gas Choice, and CNE Gas Division being collectively referred to as "Respondents") regarding electricity and natural gas sales, marketing and consulting.

6. On or about September 14, 2018, Ms. Grace Speights and Mr. Theos McKinney III, two attorneys representing Respondents, visited Mr. Dent at RLD Resources' offices in Chicago.

7. At this September 14, 2018 meeting, Ms. Speights and Mr. McKinney told Mr. Dent that certain allegations had been made against him, namely:

- a. As part of a Senior-Pro Tour golf outing sponsored by Respondents in or about July 2018 in the Chicago area, Mr. Dent was one of a large number of guests at a pre-golf party held on the patio of the Shedd Aquarium in Chicago. Ms. Speights and Mr. McKinney told Mr. Dent that a woman alleged that at this event Mr. Dent groped her.
- b. Mr. Dent asked Ms. Speights and Mr. McKinney who this person was; they refused to name her, and in this Petition she is referred to as "Person A."

- c. In connection with this same July 2018 golf outing, Respondents had arranged to distribute to their golfing guests passes, polo shirts and similar items at the Marriott Hotel on Adams Street in Chicago. Ms. Speights and Mr. McKinney told Mr. Dent that a gentleman told Respondents that he had observed Mr. Dent collecting these golf materials at the Marriott Hotel. This gentleman had stated that he, Mr. Dent, was drunk and disorderly at that time.
- d. Mr. Dent asked Ms. Speights and Mr. McKinney who this person was; they refused to name him, and in this Petition he is referred to as "Person B."
- e. Ms. Speights and Mr. McKinney also told Mr. Dent that Person A – the same unnamed woman who alleged that Mr. Dent groped her at the July 2018 Shedd Aquarium golf party – also alleged that, at a similar golf party at a Constellation Pro-Am golf outing in the Philadelphia, Pennsylvania area in or about June 2016, Mr. Dent had said to her that "she had a butt like a sister."

8. At the September 14, 2018 meeting, Mr. Dent told Ms. Speights and Mr. McKinney that all of these allegations were completely false.

9. At the September 14, 2018 meeting, Ms. Speights and Mr. McKinney told Mr. Dent that because of these allegations Constellation would be reviewing its contractual arrangements with him and RLD Resources.

10. On or about October 1, 2018, Petitioners received from Respondents correspondence, a copy of which is attached as Exhibit A to this Petition (the "Termination Notice").

11. Pursuant to the Termination Notice, Respondents terminated all contracts between Petitioners and Respondents.<sup>1</sup>

12. In correspondence dated December 19, 2019 from Respondents's counsel, a copy of which is attached as Exhibit B to this Petition, Respondents informed Petitioners that Respondents had hired a third party to investigate these claims against Mr. Dent.

13. Respondents refused to identify this third party, who is referred to in this Petition as "Person C."

14. On information and belief, Person C investigated the claims made against Mr. Dent prior to Respondents' issuance of the Termination Notice on October 1, 2018.

15. On information and belief, Person C published or republished to Respondents the statements of Person A and Person B regarding Mr. Dent described above.

16. The statements concerning Mr. Dent published by Persons A, B and C were:

- a. made as statements of fact;
- b. false; and
- c. not privileged.

17. The statements concerning Mr. Dent published by Persons A, B and C imputed to Mr. Dent acts of moral turpitude and impugned his character, reputation and good name.

18. Respondents' termination of all contractual arrangements with Petitioners

<sup>1</sup>Certain of these contracts are master agreements under which individual transaction confirmations are entered into for forward sales of commodity natural gas and electricity supply. While Respondents have stated that they will honor existing transaction confirmations, Respondents terminated all of the master agreements and will enter into no new transaction confirmations with Petitioners.

damaged Petitioners.

19. In correspondence dated December 19, 2018 from Respondents' counsel attached as Exhibit B to this Petition, Respondents admit that the statements concerning Mr. Dent published by Persons A, B and C were both the cause in fact and proximate cause of Respondents' termination of all contractual arrangements between Respondents and Petitioners.

20. Persons A, B and C may be responsible in damages to Petitioners

21. Petitioners wish to engage in discovery for the sole purpose of ascertaining the identities and whereabouts of Persons A, B and C.

22. The discovery sought by Petitioners is necessary because Respondents have refused, and continue to refuse, to provide to Petitioners the identities and addresses of Persons A, B and C.

23. Because Respondents' refuse to provide to Petitioners the names and addresses of Persons A, B and C, Petitioners are unable to prosecute against the latter appropriate legal action for recovery of damages.

WHEREFORE, Petitioners respectfully request this court to enter an order authorizing Petitioners to conduct discovery before suit against Respondents pursuant to Illinois Supreme Court Rule 224 solely for the purpose of ascertaining the identities and whereabouts of Persons A, B and C as parties who may be responsible in damages to Petitioners because of their publication of false and defamatory statements about them.

TERMINATION NOTICE

2019L002910

VIA FEDEX AND E-MAIL

RLD Resources, LLC
 333 North Michigan Avenue, Suite 1810
 Chicago, IL 60601
 Attn: Richard Dent

Dear Richard:

Consistent with our conversations, Constellation NewEnergy, Inc. (on behalf of itself and together with the retail affiliates identified in this letter, "Constellation") has elected to terminate its master agreements with RLD Resources, LLC ("RLD") going forward. Constellation and RLD will continue to honor our obligations under existing confirmations and statements of work tied to customer agreements for the remainder of the respective terms of those customer agreements, but the confirmations and statements of work will not be renewed or extended. (See attached listing.)

I have outlined our existing agreements and termination logistics as follows:

- 1) Agreement for Consulting Services between Constellation and RLD dated May 11, 2016 (as amended January 9, 2017, the "Consulting Agreement"): Pursuant to Section 2 of the Consulting Agreement, this letter shall serve as Constellation's notice of termination of the Consulting Agreement effective immediately. As more fully described in the Consulting Agreement, with respect to the Exhibit As currently in effect:
  - a. Exhibit A-1 is hereby terminated effective as of the date of this letter. The performance of the Services described in Exhibit A-1 shall terminate immediately and no payment shall be made for the month of October 2018; and
  - b. Exhibit A-2 will terminate effective as of the End Use Customer's December 2018 meter reads, as defined in Exhibit A-2 to the Consulting Agreement ("A-2 End Date"). The performance of the Services described in Exhibit A-2 shall terminate as of the A-2 End Date and payments will continue until such time as payment is collected from the End Use Customer for the December 2018 billing cycle and then remitted to RLD.

EXHIBIT A TO S. CT. RULE 224 PETITION

RLD Resources, LLC

October 1, 2018

Additionally, pursuant to Section 13 of the Consulting Agreement, Constellation hereby requests the return of all papers, materials and property of Constellation held by RLD.

- 2) Base Contract for Sale and Purchase of Natural Gas between CNE Gas Supply, LLC and RLD dated August 26, 2014 (as amended, the "NAESB"): Pursuant to Section 12 of the NAESB, Constellation hereby provides thirty (30) days' prior written notice of termination of the NAESB. This termination shall not affect or excuse the performance of Constellation or RLD under any provision of the NAESB that by its terms survives Constellation's termination. Any existing Transaction Confirmations shall continue until the end of the Delivery Periods identified therein and are not terminated by means of this letter.

- 3) Master Power Purchase and Sale Agreement between Constellation and RLD dated December 19, 2012 (as amended, the "EEI"): Pursuant to Section 10 of the EEI, Constellation hereby provides thirty (30) days' prior written notice of termination of the EEI. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this termination shall not affect or excuse the performance of Constellation or RLD under any provision of the EEI that by its terms survives Constellation's termination. The EEI shall remain in effect with respect to Transactions entered into prior to the effective date of this termination until both RLD and Constellation have fulfilled all of their obligations with respect to the Transactions. For clarity, any existing Confirmations shall continue until the end of the Delivery Periods identified therein and are not terminated by means of this letter.

- 4) Master Broker Agreements between RLD and each of (a) Constellation Energy Gas Choice, LLC dated May 27, 2017, (b) Constellation NewEnergy, Inc. dated June 7, 2016; and (c) Constellation NewEnergy – Gas Division, LLC dated May 27, 2017: Pursuant to Section 8 of each Master Broker Agreement, this letter shall serve as Constellation's written notice to RLD terminating such agreement. This termination shall be effective ninety (90) days from the above date. Any Compensation Schedules currently in effect will remain in effect until such Compensation Schedules expire or are separately terminated and will be governed by the terms of the applicable Master Broker Agreement. Please note that RLD remains bound by sections 6(j), 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, and 20 of each Master Broker Agreement subsequent to termination. Additionally, pursuant to Section 10 of each such Master Broker Agreement, Constellation hereby requests the return of all Confidential Information.

RE: October 23, 2018 Correspondence from Paul Neilan to Nina Jezic ("PGN October Letter") and December 17, 2018 Correspondence from Paul Neilan to Nina Jezic and Joseph Kirwan ("PGN December Letter")

Dear Mr. Neilan:

This letter responds to the PGN October Letter and the PGN December Letter, and memorializes prior information that has been provided to you and to your client, Richard L. Dent.

Mr. Dent has been the subject of an investigation conducted by a third-party hired by Constellation to investigate reports that Mr. Dent engaged in grossly inappropriate behavior during the 2016 and 2018 Pro-Am Tournament events where Mr. Dent was a guest of Constellation. The reports regarding Mr. Dent's behavior include among other things that Mr. Dent engaged in an inappropriate and unwanted touching of a Constellation employee and that Mr. Dent made unwelcome comments of a sexual nature to a Constellation employee. As you note in the PGN October Letter, on September 14, 2018, there was a meeting between Richard L. Dent, Grace Speights, Theos McKinney and Timothy W. Wright. That meeting was to allow Mr. Dent an opportunity to provide his recollection of the events described above. The law requires Constellation to investigate reports of such behavior and the EEOC directs employers to conduct effective investigations. Although Mr. Dent denied the allegations, his denials were not credible and the investigation concluded that the reports accurately described behaviors that were, at a minimum, in violation of Exelon's code of business conduct, completely outside the norms of socially acceptable behavior, and demeaning to Constellation employees. To date, neither Exelon nor Constellation has disclosed the findings of the investigation to any third-party, other than in privileged communications with its lawyers.

EXHIBIT B TO S. CT. RULE 224 PETITION

Paul G. Neilan, Esq.
 December 19, 2018

Given Constellation's legal obligation to investigate such allegations and the protected nature of its findings, any claim that Constellation has "impugn[ed] Mr. Dent's ... name and reputation" is frivolous.

With respect to the PGN December Letter, you allege that the natural gas confirmations NGIDX23877443 and NGIDX23877432, evidencing winter gas supply transactions documented in emails among RLD, Constellation and BP (the "Winter Trades"), are nullities because of the termination of the master agreement between RLD and Constellation. This is an incorrect understanding of the law of contracts. Contrary to your assertion, the existence of a master NAESB agreement is not a pre-requisite to parties entering into binding gas transactions. The written communications documenting the Winter Trades with explicit terms and conditions are valid agreements. Nonetheless, we agree to unwind the Winter Trades as you have requested.

Contrary to your assertions, Constellation's agreement to unwind the Winter Trades and its termination of its relationship with RLD, do not affect Constellation's ability to meet its obligations to the State of Illinois or Cook County. Your statements suggesting otherwise during our December 10, 2018 phone conversation and in the PGN December Letter are baseless. We strongly caution you and your client against making any statements to third parties that seek to interfere in any way with Constellation's customer relationships or that in any way suggest that Constellation has breached any of its contractual obligations or misrepresented information.

Exelon/Constellation stands firm in its decision to terminate its contractual relationship and commercial dealings with RLD and Mr. Dent pursuant to the October 1, 2018 Termination Notice (as defined in the PGN December Letter).

We hope that this letter will allow both parties to put this matter to rest.

Sincerely,
 Constellation NewEnergy, Inc.

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF CONSTELLATION'S MOTION TO DISMISS VERIFIED PETITION UNDER
SUPREME COURT RULE 224 FOR DISCOVERY
BEFORE SUIT TO IDENTIFY RESPONSIBLE PERSONS

Under well-established law, a victim of sexual harassment can report the harassment to his or her employer, and the employer can investigate the allegations and take appropriate action, without risking liability for defamation. Otherwise, “victims of harassment and companies with a goal of preventing harassment would be ‘handcuffed’ by a fear of defamation liability,” Vickers v. Abbott Laboratories, 308 Ill. App. 3d 393, 402 (1st Dist. 1999), and the important public policy goal of combating harassment would be frustrated.

The Petition defies this law. Petitioner Richard Dent (“Dent”) is the Chief Executive Officer of RLD Resources, Ltd. (“RLD”) (collectively, “Petitioners”), which was a vendor of Respondents (collectively, “Constellation”). Constellation retained outside employment counsel to conduct an investigation into allegations that Dent inappropriately touched a Constellation employee at an event sponsored by Constellation for its employees and contractors. Petitioners now seek pre-complaint discovery to determine the identities of the employee who reported harassment, a witness, and the lawyers retained by Constellation, so that Petitioners can sue them for defamation.

That is exactly the kind of lawsuit the law does not allow. A qualified privilege protects against defamation liability when an employee reports harassment to her employer, and when the employer undertakes an investigation. See Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 401-02. That qualified privilege can be overcome at the motion-to-dismiss stage only if the petitioner alleges facts that, if true, would suffice to demonstrate a direct intent to injure petitioners or a reckless disregard for their rights. Id. at 404. The Petition does not and cannot allege any such facts. Accordingly, Petitioners establish no basis for discovery before suit. The Petition does not set forth allegations sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss, and should be dismissed with prejudice. See Hadley v. Doe, 2015 IL 118000, ¶ 27.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Dent, as Chief Executive Officer of RLD, contracted with Constellation to provide electricity and natural gas sales, marketing and consulting services. Petition ¶ 5. On September 14, 2018, attorneys representing Constellation met with Dent to advise him that certain allegations had been made against him. Petition ¶ 6. Dent alleges in his Petition that the allegations included the following: (1) that a Constellation employee, Person A, alleged that in July 2018, Dent inappropriately touched her at a Constellation-sponsored pre-golf tournament party held at the Shedd Aquarium; (2) that Person A also alleged that in June 2016, Dent had told her that “she had a butt like a sister”; (3) that during the course of Constellation’s investigation of these harassment allegations, another individual, also employed by Constellation, Person B, had allegedly stated that Dent was drunk and disorderly; and (4) that a third party retained by Constellation to investigate the claims against Dent, Person C, had published to Constellation the statements of Persons A and

B regarding Dent when relaying the findings of the investigation. Petition ¶¶ 7, 12-14. After Constellation completed its investigation, which included the September 14, 2018 interview with Dent (the purpose of which was to give Dent “an opportunity to provide his recollection of the events” described above, Ex. B at 1), Constellation notified Dent that it was terminating its consulting agreements with RLD. Petition ¶¶ 6, 8, 10-11, 14 & Exhs. A, B.

The Petition, filed under Illinois Supreme Court Rule 224, seeks pre-suit discovery to uncover the identity of Persons A, B, and C, so that Dent and RLD can file a defamation lawsuit against them. It alleges that Persons A, B, and C published statements “imput[ing] to Dent acts of moral turpitude and impugned his character, reputation and good name,” Petition ¶ 17, and that Dent and RLD were damaged as a consequence. Petition ¶ 18.

LEGAL STANDARD

A. A Petition Under Rule 224 Must State a Viable Claim for Relief.

Under Illinois Supreme Court Rule 224, a party may engage in discovery “for the sole purpose of ascertaining the identity of one who may be responsible in damages...” Ill. Sup. Ct. R. 224(a)(1)(i). However, Rule 224 “requires a petitioner to demonstrate the reason why the proposed discovery seeking the individual’s identity is ‘necessary.’” Stone v. Paddock Pubs., Inc., 2011 IL App (1st) 093386, ¶ 14 (quoting Ill. S. Ct. Rule 224(a)(1)(ii)).

Accordingly, the Illinois Supreme Court has held that “to ascertain whether a petitioner has satisfied Rule 224’s necessity requirement, the court must evaluate a defamation complaint to determine whether it will withstand a section 2-615 motion to dismiss.” Hadley, 2015 IL 118000, ¶ 27; Stone, 2011 IL App (1st) 093386, ¶18 (“[I]f a petitioner cannot satisfy the section 2-615 standard, it is clear that the unidentified individual is not responsible for damages and the proposed discovery is not ‘necessary.’”).

“In considering whether to grant or deny a motion to dismiss, the court must determine whether the complaint standing alone has stated sufficient facts to demonstrate a cause of action pursuant to which relief may be granted.” Stone, 2011 IL App (1st) 093386, ¶ 17. To satisfy this standard, a complaint must “allege facts, rather than mere conclusions.” Id. ¶ 21. Indeed, “the plaintiff must allege specific facts supporting each element of his cause of action and the trial court will not admit conclusory allegations and conclusions of law that are not supported by specific facts.” Id. (emphasis in original).

B. To State a Defamation Claim Concerning a Privileged Communication, A Plaintiff Must Allege Facts Showing Intent to Injure or Reckless Disregard of the Truth.

To state a cause of action for defamation, the plaintiff must allege facts showing “that the defendant [1] made a false statement about him, [2] that there was an unprivileged publication to a third party with fault by the defendant, and [3] that the publication damaged plaintiff.” Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 400.

Certain communications are protected by a qualified privilege, which “effectuates the policy of facilitating a free flow of information so that correct information may ultimately be attained.” Id. at 401; Kuwik v. Starmark Star Marketing and Admin., Inc., 156 Ill. 2d 16, 24 (1993). Courts have in general recognized three classes of communications as qualifiedly privileged: “(1) those involving some interest of the person who published the [allegedly] defamatory matter; (2) those involving some interest of the person to whom the matter is published . . . ; and (3) those involving a recognized public interest.” Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 401.

If the allegations of the complaint establish that the communications are qualifiedly privileged, then the plaintiff, to survive a motion to dismiss, must allege facts sufficient to show that the privileged was “abused,” id. at 404—specifically, that “the defendant either intentionally published the material in question and knew the matter was false, or displayed a reckless disregard as to the falsity of the matter.” Id. at 401. Again, “conclusory assertion[s]” and “bare allegation[s]” do not suffice to meet the plaintiff’s pleading burden. Coghlan v. Beck, 2013 IL App (1st) 120891, ¶ 65.

ARGUMENT

The Petition should be dismissed because Dent and RLD have failed to allege facts stating a claim for defamation. The allegations establish, as a matter of law, that the communications at issue were qualifiedly privileged. See Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 401-02. Thus, Dent and RLD bear the burden of alleging specific facts showing that the privilege was abused. The Petition alleges no such facts and thus fails to satisfy that burden.

I. The Petition Identifies No Allegedly Defamatory Statement Concerning RLD.

As an initial matter, the Court should dismiss the Petition as it relates to RLD, because the Petition identifies no allegedly defamatory statement concerning RLD. Accordingly, RLD cannot state a claim for defamation. See id. at 400 (defamation plaintiff must allege “a false statement about him”) (emphasis added).

II. The Petition Should Be Dismissed in its Entirety Because the Statements in Question Were Privileged and Petitioners Have Not Alleged Facts Showing That the Privilege Was Abused.

A. The Alleged Communications Were Privileged as a Matter of Law.

The Petition identifies three sets of allegedly defamatory statements: (1) statements made by Person A reporting alleged sexual harassment to her employer; (2) statements made by Person B, in the course of Constellation’s investigation of Person A’s allegations, describing Person B’s observations of Dent on the day in question; and (3) statements made by Person C, the attorneys retained by Constellation to investigate Person A’s allegations, in reporting to Constellation on the investigation's findings. Petition ¶¶ 7, 14-15. All of these communications were qualifiedly privileged, as a matter of law.

This case is controlled by Vickers. There, the First District rejected a defamation claim based on statements made by a victim of sexual harassment reporting the harassment to her employer, and statements made by witnesses to the investigator retained by the employer to investigate the victim's allegations. Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 397, 401. The court reasoned that "these communications are privileged because all three interests" justifying a qualified privilege "arise in the case at bar." Id. at 402. The court elaborated: "First, it is clear that the [victim] had an interest in stopping harassment and abuse by plaintiff. Second, [the employer] had an interest in investigating [its] employees' concerns and taking action to prevent further harassment. And third, there is a definite general public interest in eradicating sexual harassment in the workplace." Id.

As the court further explained, the United States Supreme Court has recognized "a compelling interest in ridding workplaces of sexual harassment," and employers have an affirmative obligation to "'take all steps necessary to prevent sexual harassment from occurring'" and "'to establish a complaint procedure designed to encourage victims of harassment to come forward.'" Id. at 402 (quoting Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 806 (1998)). As the court recognized, a qualified privilege "promotes this social policy and provides protection for the victims, witnesses and investigators of sexual harassment." Id. Indeed, in the absence of a privilege, "victims of harassment and companies with a goal of preventing harassment would be 'handcuffed' by a fear of defamation liability." Id.

The statements alleged in the Petition are exactly the kind of statements that fall squarely within the holding of Vickers: they are statements made to an employer by a victim of sexual harassment concerning inappropriate touching experienced while at work (Person A); statements made to the employer by a witness (Person B), as part of Constellation's investigation consistent with its legal obligations; and statements of the investigator/lawyer (Person C) relating its findings to Constellation. The law protects statements such as these from potential defamation liability, in order to ensure that employees can report sexual harassment and employers are able to investigate it without fear of retaliatory litigation. See Ex. B to Pet. (letter from Constellation to Dent's counsel, noting that "the law requires Constellation to investigate reports of such behavior and the EEOC directs employers to conduct effective investigations."); Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 402; see also Wexler v. Morrison Knudsen Corp., No. 99 C 6522, 2000 WL 1720344, at *7 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 15, 2000) (applying Vickers to hold that a qualified privilege protected statements made in the course of an employer's investigation of racial harassment in the workplace); Scherer v. Rockwell Intern. Corp., 766 F. Supp. 593, 607 (N.D. Ill. 1991) (statements made during employer's investigation of sexual harassment, including affidavits and investigator's communication of its findings to employer, are protected by the qualified privilege); Achanzar v. Ravenswood Hospital, 326 Ill. App. 3d 944, 948-49 (1st Dist. 2001) (qualified privilege covered statement made by hospital employee to supervisor that another employee threatened to kill someone at the hospital); Gibson v. Phillip Morris, Inc., 292 Ill. App. 3d 267, 276 (5th Dist. 1997) (qualified privilege covered statements made by coworkers during course of employer's investigation into misconduct by an employee).

B. Petitioners Have Failed to Allege Any Abuse of the Privilege.

"Once a qualified privilege is established, as it has been in this case" based on the allegations in the complaint, "a communication is only actionable if the plaintiff" can allege facts that would establish an "abuse[ of] the privilege." Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 404. Specifically, Petitioners must allege not only that the statements were false, but that they were made with knowledge of falsity or “reckless disregard” for the truth. Id. at 401. Moreover, the allegation of such knowledge or reckless disregard cannot be conclusory, but instead must be supported with specific factual allegations. For example, in Coghlan, the First District affirmed the dismissal of a defamation claim where the plaintiff had conclusorily alleged that the defendants knew that statements they had made were false. The court held that “the bare conclusory allegation” was insufficient, because the plaintiffs “have alleged no facts from which actual malice may be inferred, i.e. ... [that the statement was made] with a high degree of awareness of its probable falsity or that [the defendant] had serious doubts as to its truth.” Coghlan, 2013 IL App (1st) 120891, ¶ 56; see also Kuwik, 156 Ill. 2d at 24.

This case is even easier than Coghlan, because the Petition does not even allege facts supporting an abuse of the privilege—it only alleges (conclusorily) that the statements at issue were false. That falls far short of what is needed to plead an abuse of the privilege. Coghlan, 2013 IL App (1st) 120891, ¶ 56; Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 401; see also Muthuswamy v. Burke, 269 Ill. App. 3d 728, 732 (1993) (“In order to overcome privilege knowledge or reckless disregard as to falsity must be sufficiently pled and proven.” (emphasis added)); Quinn v. Jewel Food Stores, Inc., 276 Ill. App. 3d 861, 872 (1st Dist. 1995) (affirming dismissal of defamation action because plaintiff failed to allege that the defendant had abused the qualified privilege).<sup>1</sup> Accordingly, the Petition must be dismissed.

The Court, moreover, should dismiss the Petition with prejudice and not allow Petitioners leave to replead. The Petition and attached exhibits definitively refute any allegation that the privilege was abused, so that amendment would be futile. As the Petition recounts, Constellation retained third-party counsel to conduct an independent, attorney-client privileged investigation of the allegations, and that investigation included meeting with Dent to inform him of the allegations against him and to obtain his side of the story. Petition ¶¶ 7-8, 12-14; Ex. B at 1 (letter from Constellation to Dent’s counsel explaining that the purpose of meeting with Dent was “to allow Mr. Dent an opportunity to provide his recollection of the events described above”).

The Petition’s exhibits further state that Constellation and its investigators considered Dent’s denials in light of the other evidence that the investigation uncovered and concluded that the denials were “not credible.” Ex. B at 1. Constellation was entitled to weigh evidence it had gathered and decide in good faith to credit its employees’ version of events; there is no basis for inferring any knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard for the truth.

Furthermore, Constellation emphasized that “neither Exelon [Constellation’s parent company] nor Constellation has disclosed the findings of the investigation to any third-party, other than in privileged communications with its lawyers.” Id. Constellation’s efforts to preserve the confidentiality of its findings further confirms its good faith use of the privilege. See Vickers, 308 Ill. App. 3d at 404-05 (no abuse of the privilege where there is no “concrete evidence to support the notion that [the company’s] employees fabricated stories,” and where “employees deliberately followed company personnel policies in accordance with federal law and investigated allegations into plaintiff’s conduct before taking action”); Kuwik, 156 Ill. 2d at 30 (suggesting that, to find an abuse of privilege, plaintiff would need to demonstrate a reckless investigation or improper dissemination of the findings).<sup>2</sup>

In light of the allegations presented in the Petition and the exhibits accompanying it, Dent could not amend the Petition so as to survive a motion to dismiss. Thus, the Petition should be dismissed with prejudice. See, e.g., Bruss v. Przybylo, 385 Ill. App. 3d 399, 405 (2d Dist. 2008) (a complaint should be dismissed with prejudice if a plaintiff can prove no set of facts that will entitle the plaintiff to recovery).

<sup>2</sup> Ironically, by filing this Petition, Dent is the one responsible for publicly disseminating the allegations against him. As Constellation explained in its letter, it did not disclose the findings of its investigation to any third party, except in attorney-client privileged communications. Pet. Ex. B at 1.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Petition should be dismissed with prejudice.

Case No. 19 L 2910

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Before the Court is a motion to reconsider the dismissal of a Rule 224 petition brought by petitioners Richard L. Dent and RLD Resources, LLC. The motion has been briefed with a response. Oral argument was had at the presentation of the motion. The Court has considered the arguments and reviewed all submitted materials, including the cited case law, as well as the transcripts of proceedings from June 21, 2019 and July 19, 2019.

The purpose of a motion to reconsider is to bring to the trial court's attention a change in the law, an error in the trial court's previous application of existing law, or newly discovered evidence that was not available at the time of the prior hearing or decision. Horlacher v. Cohen, 2017 IL App (1st) 162712, ¶ 79. The decision of whether to grant a motion to reconsider is within the sound discretion of the trial court. Cable Am., Inc. v. Pace Elecs., Inc., 396 Ill. App. 3d 15, 24 (2009). Petitioners assert in their motion that the Court misapplied the law in its June 19, 2019 ruling.

On June 21, 2019, this Court issued an oral ruling on respondents' motion to dismiss the underlying Rule 224 petition. The Court held that the petition failed to comply with the Rule and dismissed it on the grounds that the purpose of Rule 224 is satisfied where a petitioner has already identified someone who may be sued. Low Cost Movers, Inc. v. Craigslist, Inc., 2015 IL App (1st) 143955.

The court in Low Cost Movers articulated the standard for evaluating Rule 224 petitions, holding as follows:

The purpose of Rule 224 is to ascertain "the identity of one who may be responsible in damages." The purpose of Rule 224 has been served despite Low Cost having no basis to sue Craigslist for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage or a violation of the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act. The Beale court observed that the trial judge determines the extent of inquiry on a case-by-case basis, and that a petition which sought to establish actual liability, rather than the potential for liability, should be denied. Rule 224 is not intended to permit a party to engage in a wide-ranging, vague, and speculative quest to determine whether a cause of action actually exists. Low Cost Movers, Inc. v. Craigslist, Inc., 2015 IL App (1st) 143955, ¶ 17 (internal citations omitted).

This case closely mirrors Low Cost Movers. "According to Low Cost, identity alone does not suffice as a basis to dismiss a Rule 224 petition where the individual identified cannot be a defendant under the petitioner's espoused causes of action." Id. at ¶ 13. Petitioners already know the identities of entities which may be sued: Constellation and its attorneys. Petitioners' motion to reconsider asserts that "Low Cost Movers is irrelevant to a case where, as here, the respondent in discovery has neither admitted to engaging, nor is found to have engaged in the wrongful conduct complained of in the Rule 224 Petition." Motion, p. 4. Respondents' response to the motion, however, notes that "Petitioners already know the identity of a party involved in the events giving rise to the termination of Constellation's at-will contracts with Petitioner RLD Resources, Ltd.: namely, Constellation." Response, p. 2.

The crux of petitioners' argument is that they lack a viable legal claim against Constellation and that a Rule 224 petition is therefore the only vehicle available to obtain the identities of the unnamed individuals who allegedly defamed Mr. Dent. It may be that Mr. Dent does not have a viable claim against Constellation for defamation, or a desire to name Constellation as a defendant, but the Low Cost Movers case is again analogous on this issue. "The purpose of Rule 224 has been served despite Low Cost having no basis to use Craigslist for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage or a violation of the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act." Low Cost Movers, 2015 IL App (1st) 143955, ¶ 17. The test for a 224 petition is whether the petitioner knows of anyone who may be liable in damages. Constellation's response admits that it may be liable in damages – indeed, that is their primary argument.

Claims against Constellation are not limited to those elaborated in the underlying petition. The damages that Mr. Dent and RLD Resources, LLC appear to allege in their petition are based upon the termination of contracts. The issue before this Court is whether petitioners have yet identified any of the persons or entities who may be the cause of those terminations. Rule 224 has a specific, narrow purpose that allows a petitioner to obtain the identity of a potential defendant when the petitioner lacks knowledge of anyone who may be liable in damages.

The issue before the Court is thus whether Mr. Dent and RLD have knowledge of any individual or entity that may be liable in damages to them. Based upon the record before the Court, they do. Whether petitioners pursue claims for defamation or otherwise, claims are available. Accordingly, petitioners' motion to reconsider is DENIED.
